In New York, The Surrey hotel has partnered with lingerie designer Fleur du Mal to create its 'Ultimate Romance' package. Guests booking the package will receive a series of romantic indulgences including a complimentary silk kimono from Fleur du Mal, a rose-scented Dyptique candle, turn-down service with champagne and Dana's Bakery macaroons plus a couples massage at the Cornelia Spa; a room upgrade will be provided subject to availability. The package is valid from February 1 - 28, 2013, rates starting at $800 per night. Quote 'FLEUR' when booking.

At the Pavillon de la Reine hotel, which faces a private courtyard on the Places de Vosges in Paris, Valentine's guests will receive a glass of champagne on arrival, accompanied by a map of the best spots to kiss in the city. Admittedly that's a pursuit that's likely to appeal to couples in the very early stages of their relationship rather than those who've been together for longer than they'd care to remember, but if you're going to Paris on Valentine's Day then conspicuous shows of romance are a requirement. Ramming the point home, guests will also receive a padlock and key, enabling them to 'lock their love' to Le Pont des Arts bridge "as the sun sets over the Seine". The package costs from €420 per room per night, based on two sharing a superior room on a B&B basis.

The two-night Ultimate Valentine's Package at Six Senses Yao Noi in Thailand packs a lot in. Guests travel to the resort by helicopter from Phuket airport and commence their stay at the resort's Riva Yacht, where they'll dine and spend the night in a glass-ceilinged cabin. In the morning, breakfast for two will be served on a private beach. Back at the resort, the second night will be spent in the Six Senses honeymoon villa, where dinner will be served by the resort's executive sous chef. There'll be time for spa treatments too, and a champagne breakfast before departure on the third day. The package costs from £2,574 per person (THB 140,213) and is available from 14 February - 31 October 2013.

A similar package is on offer at The Sarojin in Phang Nga, Thailand. Guests at the resort can spend an evening 'shipwrecked' on their own private island, accompanied only by a private butler and chef to cater for their needs. Prices start from THB 104,000 (approximately GBP 2,000) for two people, including six nights' accommodation in a Garden Residence, a Thai cooking class and lunch by a jungle waterfall, the private island experience and transfers.
